Wai-tangi – the call of water.

Treaty Settlements are giving us new directions for water and forests. These come from anguish at seeing our rivers become degraded and polluted. Rivers have been diverted and damned for electricity power, used to carry waste and more recently they are contaminated from agricultural intensification and over-used for irrigation. We now have unhealthy rivers and endangered indigenous fish.

An innovation to change this and strengthen Maori interests recognizes the Whanganui River as an ancestor and as a legal person. The river is a living whole which flows from mountains to sea, with all those associated with the river to have regard to its wellbeing and life-force, or mauri.

Over this Wai-tangi period we can celebrate this remarkable arrangement forged through the Waitangi Tribunal process.
