Eco Corner—

Eat Local, Feel Better

Eating locally grown produce isn't just good for the environment—it's good for you, too. Fresh fruits and vegetables grown close to home are often picked at their peak, meaning they're packed with flavour and nutrients. Buying local supports our farmers and keeps money in our community, fostering a more sustainable and resilient food system. It also reduces the carbon footprint of long-distance transportation. Plus, seasonal produce encourages a varied diet throughout the year. Whether from a market stall, a farm shop, a community garden, or your own garden, choosing local helps you eat well, feel great, and connect more deeply with the place you call home.
